Choose your topic wisely

This is because you will have wider scope for research and statistics to back your research. You will have so much to write about, which will make your essay interesting to read. Your readers will stay engaged throughout your essay. Ensure you have relevant information and stay focused around the topic.

Keep your ideas organized

Do not lose your reader by having a disorganized essay. Plan your ideas from the very word go. This will help you know what to write and have enough content. The reader will be interested to keep on reading if you have organized your ideas systematically. Let your ideas flow smoothly from one to another.

Write shorter sentences

Aim to be concise and precise. Get to the point without being too wordy and adding too much unnecessary information. People will lose interest in your work if you write lengthy sentences. Use simple and readable vocabulary. Ensure even a lower grade child can easily read your essay. Read your work all over again. Remove word or phrases that do not introduce any new idea to your essay. As you aim to be precise, be careful not to lose the purpose or the flow of your essay.

Use examples or statistics

Readers will get bored if you are writing on a dry subject matter. If your topic is just boring, you can bring some life in it by using, illustrations or statistics. Examples are great way of supporting your ideas. People will understand better, rather than when you are trying to explain it in your own words. Another way of making your essay interesting and engaging to your reader is by using relevant evidence, such as statistics. The reader will see that you took your time to research and now you understand the point. Ensure there is a logical presentation of ideas.

Use rhetorical questions

One of the best and traditional methods of keeping your audience engaged is by applying rhetorical questions. This one style never gets old. You can use rhetorical questions in one paragraph and address that rhetoric on another paragraph. You can effectively pose rhetoric on a new sentence of inquiry. Rhetorical questions increase the dramatic effect of your essay, making it more interesting and engaging to keep on reading.

Do not wander

Avoid losing focus and concentration in your essay. If need be, keep checking the title of your essay to remind yourself to stick to the purpose of the essay. It is possible to get lost as you write. This will confuse your reader as you go back and forth with your ideas. Focus on the topic and the purpose of your essay. Refer to the topic as many times as you can.

After writing your essay. Read through so many times. Correct and edit the errors. Critique yourself and make necessary changes. You can have your friends and family members read to see if it is engaging enough.
